THE ANNUAL

Foreword

The Annual Staff presents the C. H. S. Annual for 1934. This has been made possible by the help and cooperation of, not only the Senior Class, but the entire High School. We hope you will enjoy the Annual at this reading and that in future years it will serve as a book of memories of your High School activities and friends.

High School Song

TUNE: ON WISCONSIN

Onward, fellows, we must conquer
Fight for Creston High!
Brown and Gold expect a victory
Win for Creston High!
Honor, fame, and glory calling
You must do your best
So whate'er the contest
Win for Creston High!

Fight then, fellows, fight to conquer
Fight for Creston High!
Never weary in the contest
Win for Creston High!
Though the battle goes against you
You must stand and fight
So whate'er the contest
Win for Creston High!

TUNE: THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S

VERSE I

The days that we spent in
The High School are gone,
And memories surround us
As we wait for the dawn.
We'll always remember
As long as we're here,
The days filled with fun
And so full of good cheer

VERSE II

And now we are starting
All over again
We're planning the new things
And we hope to win,
And unless all our dreams
Turn to castles in air,
I know we'll be striving
Our burden to bear.

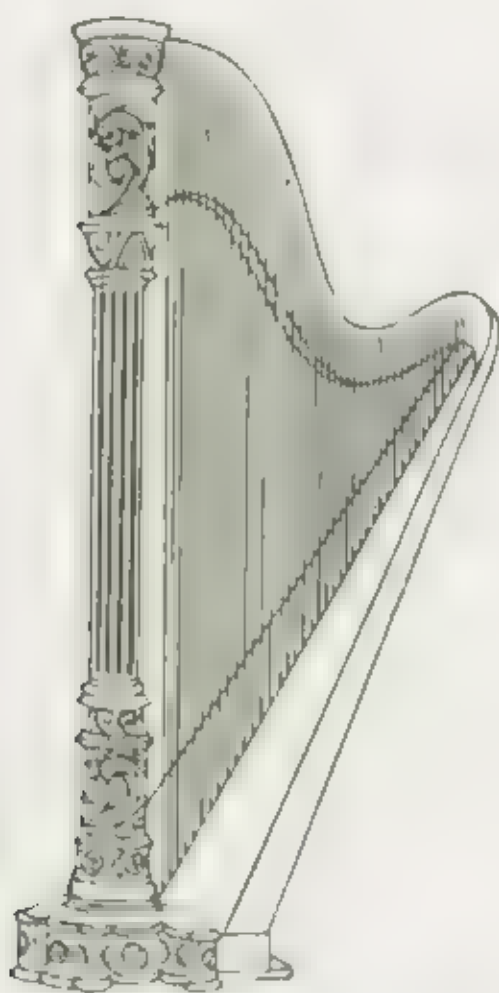

CHORUS

We Seniors of Creston
Are saying goodbye
To Classmates, to Teachers
To memories gone by,
And if in the future
Our footsteps should stray
Then we shall all remember
High School Days.

Senior Class Prophecy

In the year of 1944, I decided to visit my old friend and schoolday superintendent, Mr. W. J. Himes, and try to locate the missing persons. I was able to locate Himes, who was then in the United States Army, and he helped me to locate the missing persons. I was able to locate them.

[illegible][illegible]

Our next stop was Washington, D. C. We went to the White House to talk to old-time political boss, Democratic President, Ben Harrison. He was very friendly as he was in high school—very studious and serious minded.

Then we drove on to Columbus, Ohio, and interviewed Thelma Lehman and Chris Cameron, who were co-professors in Ohio State University.

They were confident that it would prove successful.

From Death Valley we went to Cheyenne, and saw a Rodeo. Relda Scholl had a mean horse.

We then went to Reno, Nevada. While going past the divorce courts, we recognized Florence Kravitz coming down the street. We stopped and waited for her. A moment later she came out and she told us that it was the first time she had been disappointed in matrimony.

We went on our westward course to California. We stopped in Los Angeles and attended a meeting at Auntie Tami's. Harold Hays was there, too. He had been married. We met Eva Hays. When I told her about my mother's death she said, "Auntie Tami told me you were in New York." She said she would call me when I got back. But it wasn't the Auntie Sam took care of me for a while. I said, "I'll take it from me, she sure could make that plane talk."

On our arrival in Hollywood we were treated royally by our friends who had

While dining at the "Mayfair," we renewed the acquaintance of Glenn S., who was playing first "sax" in the Vincent Lopez orchestra.

The thought that C. H. S. had produced such a renowned class made our return trip a pleasant one.

RUSSEL SCHMOLLINGER

THE ANNUAL

Class History

As I was hastily looking through my books and magazines, I found one which was entitled "Our Class." I paused a moment to leaf through its pages and to my surprise I found in it the story of my high school days. How happy I was that after all these years I could delve into this book and recall great pleasures of my youth.

Upon turning the first page I beheld a group of 34 students looking very bright and diligent. Below the picture I saw the names of our first class officers. Homer Miller was president; Raymond Schlegel, vice president; Wayne Orr, treasurer; Betty Myers, secretary; and Class Adviser, Miss Studer. These people guided us successfully through all our trials and troubles our first year.

Turning a page I saw we had the misfortune of losing a few this year. Vivian Stout moved to Wooster, but in return Durant Lehman came from Orrville. But to our sorrow, Charles Showalter left us.

Activities interested our group and Harry Zimmerman and Charles Arnold went out working in basketball and baseball. Margaret Ecker and Irene Peake were out for girls' basketball. In music, James Patterson, Raymond Schlegel, Homer Miller, Glenn Sonnedecker, and Margaret Ecker represented us. We passed all the exams with a small casualty here and there, but we managed to be ready for another year.

Turning a few more pages, I came upon the word Sophomores. Here I found we had gained and had 35 upon our list. This year I saw we changed officers. James Patterson was elected president; Robert Thompson, vice president; Betty Myers, secretary; Russell Schmollinger, treasurer; and class adviser, Miss Studer. I glanced to the next page and saw a list of those lost and gained during this year. Rittman gave us Robert Thompson; Wooster, Lena Buchanan; Emerson Metsker from Canton; and lastly, I found my own name, a transfer from L. Roy to Creston. But then, on the other side was a list of those leaving us. Paul Slater, Virgil Bowman, Charles Woodward, Sylvia Ramsier, Margaret Ecker, and Grant Ditch. Grant went to Burbank to become a school rival.

Again activities stepped in and we had an acceptable showing from our class. We enjoyed our parties at the first of the year; and in basketball we were represented by Charles Arnold, Harry Zimmerman, Grant Ditch, Glenn Sonnedecker, Wayne Orr, Homer Miller, and myself. Out of these Arnold, Zimmerman, Ditch, Miller and myself were out for the baseball squad.

One happening was a great honor for our class. I saw, in large letters under the basketball picture, that Harry Zimmerman won first place in the foul shooting contest at Wooster. Debate attracted two of our classmates and Homer Miller and Marjorie Wright gained places as alternates. Turning the page, I saw that through all the trials of the exams and lessons which taunted and tempted us to leave and never come back, we were determined to go on and we hoped to meet the next year.

THE ANNUAL

I started on through the book but stopped suddenly at the caption, "Juniors." This time, after a few mishaps here and there, we had 28 in our class. Kathryn Lawton, from Rittman, was again back with us. This year a few minor changes had been made. Tom Patterson was our class president; Robert Tappan, vice president; Wayne Orr, treasurer; LaVonne Benjamin, secretary; and Harry Frey, class adviser. This year I saw a new spirit of competition between the Sophomores and Seniors. Our first real opportunity came when we gave our class play. We presented "Mrs. Tubbs of Shantytown," which proved a great success. From the proceeds we banqueted the dignified Seniors at Wooster.

In baseball and basketball we were represented by the same boys as the year before. Leaving further, I saw that we took more interest in debate this year. Homer, Wayne, Glenn, and myself were among those selected to go out and argue with the other schools. We won first place in the county. Glenn represented the school in short story and won second place in county competition. Glenn, Homer, Leonard, and Christopher again answered the call of the spirit of music.

This year, we were getting to be more sound and basic in our education and we passed through with colors flying.

Next, I came to the word "Seniors!" How this word made a thrill go through me as I remembered those last school days. This time we elected new officers and Glenn Sonnedecker became president; Wayne Orr, vice president; Harold Henry, secretary-treasurer; and Harry Frey, class adviser. We were then on our last stretch. We were again represented in basketball and baseball.

In debate, six senior boys made the team. League competition was abandoned because of the scarlet fever epidemic. Glenn again represented us in short story. We gave our senior class play, "Here Comes Charlie," which was the greatest success of many years. We were banqueted, I saw on this page, by the Juniors, for which we were very appreciative.

Our annual, I saw by reading the next page, was a great success and we, the Seniors of 1934, feel proud, if perhaps unduly, of our record in our high school days.

I pored over other interesting pages and wondered where I had gotten this book. I looked at the back and found it was the work of the Class of 1934.

Junior Class History

Dear Diary:

September:

I know you simply cannot imagine all the wonderful things we Juniors shall have to confide in you now that school has started

Tonight, we took the Freshies on a roast to Shaw's woods. I'm sure they enjoyed themselves in spite of the fact that we deemed it necessary to use a little stove blackening on them to give a little "color" to initiation services. Plenty of "hot dogs" compensated a little

Today, we organized, dear Diary, and elected Harvey Linder president; Roy Amstutz, vice president; Margaret Sykes, treasurer; Verda Metz, secretary; and Miss Cahill as our adviser. We decided to keep green and white as our class colors, and selected the sweet pea as our flower

Tonight, the Freshies entertained us quite royally at the house of Katharine Fulton. It was a glorious night, so we played games on the lawn. And what quantities of ice cream and cake they served us!

October:

Tonight, we sponsored an old-fashioned Box Social after the regular P. T. A. meeting. What fun it was! Some of the boxes sold quite high considering we have a depression! So we made several dollars, one-third of which we gave to the P. T. A.

Hallowe'en - this is the occasion for our biggest activity up to date. Tonight, we sponsored a High School Party. Cornstalks, pumpkins, balloons, ghosts, and jack-o-lanterns decorated the "gym". Booths, containing side shows and food to sell, lined the walls. Whistles and masked students in costumes added to the festival air. Isabelle Buchanan and Russell Schmollinger received prizes for being the best costumed. The pop-corn, cider, pumpkin pies, hot dogs, and candy which we sold netted us a gain. But did we work!

December:

We were not actively interested in any particular thing last month -except Thanksgiving vacation. This month we are gay at the prospect of a ten-day Christmas Holiday. However, dear Diary, we are sad at the prospect of losing one of our class members. Russell Harris is moving to Coshocton. C. H. S. will miss both Russell and Carl!

Tonight, just a few days before Christmas, we gave the Harris's a farewell party. The Sophomores joined us in wishing them bon voyage

January:

Dear Diary, the only thing we can say of this month is that we all suffered - and survived - mid-winter

We are also enjoying the basketball games. We are very proud to have five Juniors on the team -Kissinger, Rhoads, Ditch, Linder, and Stahl.

February:

Today, try-outs for Debate were held and Hazel Metz and Roy Amstutz made the team.

Dear Diary, I am so excited. Last night, I was fortunate enough, or the judges were kind enough, to give me second place in County Declamation. Lady Luck was surely my sponsor

THE ANNUAL

Today, we selected our class play -- "The Eighteen-Carat Boob."

March

This month was interrupted by the closing of school for an indefinite time, due to the epidemic of scarlet fever. Thank goodness, none of us were victims

April

We gave the Junior Class Play and from it received enough remuneration to enable us to banquet our Senior friends

May

Dear Diary - So much is happening this month. Junior-Senior Banquet, at Wooster; Commencement, at which time we lose the class which well, after all, in spite of the fact that they're Seniors, we'll rather miss them next year. C. H. S. won't be quite the same!

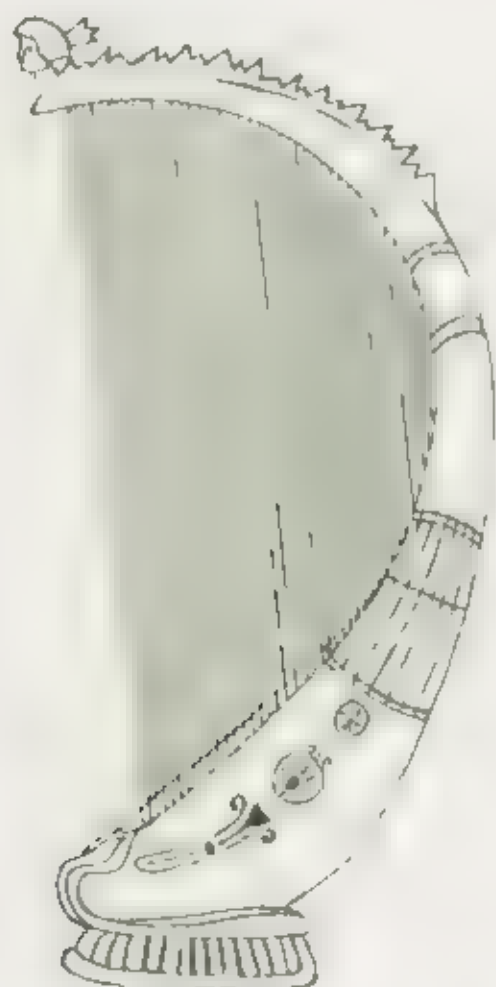

Speaking of next year, our final exams are facing us, which will tell the tale of whom of us will be dignified Seniors! Fond adieu, Dear Diary, until then. May we as a whole greet you next September, with all our important responsibilities which shall rest on our shoulders

Sophomore Class History

With garnet and orange fluttering from the rudder, we the Sophomores of '36, on the fifth day of September, 1933, took off on the good plane C. H. S., enroute to the airport of Education.

Twenty-four of us, with passports in hand, began the second of the four-year flight to the "City of Graduation." Mr. Smith was the Pilot; Carl Harris, First Assistant; Zetta Shankland, Stenographer; Grace Grunder, Second Assistant; and Rena Freeman, Treasurer.

Contact made, the sputtering of the motor was the signal to begin the race with the other so-called dignified Juniors and Seniors. The first of our flight went fine, but after trying to avoid the larger planes, "Seniors" and "Juniors," we found ourselves lost in a terrible tail-spin of Six-Weeks Tests; but after a large zoom we again found that our plane had entered the "Path of Knowledge Beacon."

During our flight we landed safely six times on the "Island of Recreation" for parties. With the privileged Seniors as hostesses, a great number of guests enjoyed hot dogs. We, later, returned their hospitality. At the mid-year we were very unfortunate, because while flying south we had to land at Coshocton where we lost our First Assistant. The Juniors aided us in saying goodbye. We then discovered our banner to be rather tattered and old; so when we again took off, orange and white were fluttering in the breeze.

Carl Harris, Emerson Rugh, and Harry Moyer visited the "Land of Sport," and brought back many victories. Then to add to our experiences of fright, some of us nearly lost our lives in a nose-dive—"Final Exams."

However, regaining our courage we flew onward to the "City of Graduation," ending the second year of our flight with a very successful landing on "Vacation Island."

Freshman Class History

As we are all gathered together for the last time as Freshmen, I will read the happenings of the year:

Our first activity is Freshman's class. The first meeting of our class, Miss B. J. Jones, the class leader, Raymond Arnold, class president, and class. For our class we picked the name "The Young Bunch" for our class. We selected Lavender and Gold as our class colors.

About two weeks after school started the Junior class gave us a weiner roast in Hack's woods. There were not but only the system of Creston High. The first Freshman meeting was held at the home of Kathy. For our class we picked the name "The Young Bunch" for our class.

On the 15th of the month we had a party at the school for all students. The first Freshman meeting was held at the home of Kathy. For our class we picked the name "The Young Bunch" for our class. We selected Lavender and Gold as our class colors.

On Washington's Birthday we gave a chapel program. We also, with the aid of the Sophomores, gave a program. The name of the program was "The Young Bunch". This was given by the Smithville Players.

In athletics we were represented by Raymond Arnold on the basketball and baseball teams; also by Otto Glassnap, Harry Kissinger, Robert Shaffer, and Clare Blough on the basketball team, Glassnap playing in the county tournament.

Synopsis

A story of modern and fashionable life is revealed in this play. Larry Elliott, a true friend of everyone, loves his fiancée, Vivian Smythe-Kersey, very much, much to the joy of his aunt who could persuade Vivian to do anything she wished.

Larry promised old Bill Hopps to care for his child, whom he thought was a boy, and his old pardner, Aleck Twiggs. Charlie and Aleck arrived, much to the displeasure of his aunt and Vivian, who said she would not marry him if he continued this crazy plan. Nevertheless, Larry was very determined; so with the aid of his college mate, Ted Hartley, whom his aunt and fiancée disliked very much, managed to bring these people into his house. Charlie, discovered to be a girl, was very crude and they all were disgusted with her. Mrs. Smythe-Kersey, on being insulted by Uncle Aleck, said she would never come again. Her son Mortimer, who thought life very boring, found Charlie interesting—much to the disgust of his mother. Charlie, on having been accused of stealing, went away; however, Mrs. Farnham was the guilty

Charlie became quite sophisticated during her stay in New York and had many lovers—receiving marriage proposals from Ted, Mortimer, and Larry; but she loved only Larry. It ended in a happy love affair for these two.

Humor is added to the play by the antics of Uncle Aleck, in the guise of becoming a butler, and by the Irish maid's love affair.

THE ANNUAL

Synopsis

Alice Bisnette's gay summer house party, celebrating her wedding on the following day, is interrupted by a raw, gawky, hick-like country cousin of Daisy Bell. His coming creates excitement in a household already thrilled over the fact that a jewel thief known as "The Crow" is at large. Everyone falls under suspicion.

Moreover, complications arise in the love affair (?) of Alice and Raymond. A mysterious young man, Jack Merry, after many difficulties wins Alice.

Comedy is furnished by Kitty and Billy, Bud, and the two colored servants.

THE ANNUAL

Short Story

After the contest for the best short story was announced a great many contributions were submitted by the student body. From these "Strife in the Stratosphere" written by Glenn Sonnedecker, was chosen as the Creston entry in the county contest. County results are not known as yet. Last year Glenn's story placed second in county competition.

Declamation

Creston High was represented at the County Declamation Contest at Apple Creek, February 13, 1934, by Verda Metz, a member of the Junior class. A silver medal was awarded her for winning second place with her declamation, "On the Other Train."

TYPE ANNUAL

Debate Team

(2nd Row)—Robert Thompson, Glenn Sonnenbucker, Hazel Metz, Leonard Showalter, Miss Cahill

The Question: Resolved that the U. S. should adopt the essential features of the British system of radio operation and control.

The Affirmative team was composed of Christopher Cameron, Glenn Sonnenbucker, and Harold Henry with Robert Thompson as Alternate; the Negative team of Leonard Showalter, Homer Miller and Roy Amstutz with Hazel Metz as alternate.

Although we made much preparation and held a practice debate early in the season, we were eliminated from league competition by the closing of school because of the scarlet fever epidemic.

Strife In The Stratosphere

The morning of April 4, 1934, dawned bright and clear! All was in readiness! The scientific instruments were installed and the sealed altimeter was in place. In another twenty-four hours would it register a new record or a new failure?

This was a question Kendrick Dalton and Roland Cromwell had been spending days in preparation for answering. They had checked and rechecked their instruments, they had labored over the installation of the cosmic ray machine. Each day adverse weather reports had brought disappointment. But with the tragedy of the Russian air explorers fresh in their minds, these two sons of America, the pioneer nation, were without fear, to pioneer in the air. Accompanying almost super-mechanical preparations went silent and fervent prayers for suitable weather.

And this April dawn seemed to be the answer to the two youths' prayers. The huge gas bag swayed in the breeze, dwarfing the aluminum ball beneath it, in which Rol and Ken hoped to live for a day. Word had gone out that the day of days had arrived and people were swarming to the field—some because of curiosity, others because of keen interest.

Finally, the two young scientists crawled into the stratosphere balloon. The crowd was tense. This flight would herald either fame or death. Slowly the balloon arose from the earth, then faster and faster it ascended, as the gas expanded in the thinning atmosphere—until the blue and rose of the Spring dawn seemed to envelop this now toy-like balloon, silver, mixing with greying mists, was wafted towards infinity!

Inside the aluminum ball tense excitement reigned as the young adventurers busied themselves in their miniature laboratory. The altimeter registered 10,000 feet, then 20,000 feet! Now Rol and Ken were living by means of their artificial air system. Quickly the altimeter climbed—25,000 feet, 30,000 feet! All the various machines were in operation. Steadily checked the cosmic ray machine, recording facts that had baffled man for centuries. At 35,000 feet, they were still rising, but a strong Southwest wind was buffeting them.

Suddenly, Roland shouted excitedly, "Ken, we're making it! We're MAKING it!"

All human operations seemed to cease as they riveted their eyes on the altimeter, which was recording their height. Simultaneously they shouted, "We've broken the record!"

Radio flashed the message to the waiting world. Eagerly they peered out the port holes! What a thrill! Below, huge banks of rolling, white, fleecy clouds parted now and then to give them a view of Mother Earth—its curvature being plainly visible. Above, surrounding them, was nothing but space—a blue-gray expanse of emptiness!

But there was not time for such unscientific observations. Important work must be done. Rol took reading after reading from scientific instruments and pictures with their sensitive cameras. Bob kept in radio contact with the earth and entered observations every fifteen minutes into their history-making diary. So absorbed were they that both failed to notice the quick passage of time. Ten hours had elapsed since their take-off. Suddenly Rol—he could scarcely breathe! His lungs were on fire and his head felt bursting! A great weight was pressing him down—down. . . . Something was wrong with the air system!

Consciousness began to go, but Bob weakly lifted himself to the oxygen tanks. Three-fourths full! What could the matter be? They could only survive a few more minutes. Making a great effort he succeeded in opening the small door to the valves and tubes. A veil of mist seemed to be covering his eyes, but through the fog of his brain, habit and his thorough knowledge of the apparatus, led him to the most likely places of trouble, the nitrogen and oxygen lines. He tested the nitrogen lines. All O.K., valves working, tubes open; and plenty of pressure! Next, the oxygen—tubes open; valves—"But what was this?" With weak, nervous fingers Ken fumbled at the valve. It was stuck! Unconsciousness at this time overtook him and without a sound he fell in a heap! But a soft hissing sound began to fill the ball and air once more began circulate.

THE ANNUAL

lating. The force of his weight in falling had pulled open the valve which his fingers had been clutching. All was well in the silver sphere!

Slowly they regained consciousness and began to breathe normally. Although very weak, they began to catch up with their work. Precious minutes had been lost. So for eight hours they worked like Trojans! They were now beginning to descend with nothing but that one harrowing experience to mar their flight. They were bringing down with them data, priceless to Compton and men of that profession. To themselves they were bringing fame!

Thirty five thousand feet! Thirty thousand feet, now twenty-five thousand! Soon they would once more be on the good "terra firma." Their weary smiles were those of knowledge of a work well done. Their smiles were suddenly erased from their faces as a terrific lurch of the gondola sent them sprawling. The metal cabin was being whipped about like a toy in the teeth of this terrific gale. By an occasional flash of lightning, black clouds could be seen churning all about them. Suddenly a sickening snap!

"God," cried Ken, "we're breaking loose from the gas bag!"

His eyes were wide with horror as he grasped the hand rail in the crazily tilted cabin. Rol was as white as snow, but kept a grip on himself.

"Don't give up the ship yet, old man!" He yelled above the wind.

Now they were hovering lower over the earth and the storm had abated, but almost instantly it sprang up again in all its fury.

Soon, two more snaps—two more cables broken! The remaining moorings would not hold the heavy metal ball for long in the storm!

Just as dawn was breaking the storm abated as quickly as it had arisen, and they were once more being gently lowered to earth.

Where had the storm carried them? Exhaustedly crawling to a port-hole, Rol was ready to feast his eyes once again on soil, but with a gasp he sank back. Curiously Ken gazed below and to his amazement saw nothing but miles of rolling waves—the cold, dark waves of the Atlantic. No land, no islands, no coast. They had drifted far from the land they had seen land, the good old U. S. A. Were they after their experiences in the air to die the death allotted a sailor? Only a few hundred feet above the water, in the early morning light they saw some fishermen. If they were picked up they would surely be dead, for they could not live long in that open, choppy sea in their weakened condition.

But back along the shore an old fisherman sat mending his nets in the early dawn. Happening to look up at the light, he saw a strange sight. The sun caught the silver of the ball and reflected its message. The old sailor gazed at this strange apparition wending its way upward, then he thought of the smiling faces of the two stratosphere explorers in the previous day's newspaper. Hurriedly knocking the ashes from his pipe the old fisherman looked up at the sky. There it was, the huge balloon. When almost a mile distant, he saw the two airmen jump and the heavy metal ball settle slowly beneath the waves. Down into the sea went the priceless data and equipment for which the young pioneers had risked all in the stratosphere to gain. Once more the elements had conquered man's ambition to solve the mysteries of the world beyond the clouds.
